

A histogram is organized into equal, non-overlapping intervals represented by bars of the same width with no space between the bars. The height or length of the bar represents the frequency of occurrences within each interval (frequency distributions). Changes in interval size of the continuous data depicted on the x -axis may influence interpretations related to the spread of data.

